

Subject: CSWC Operational Period Summary 1800 December 20 to 0600 December 21 2013

WEATHER:

Northern California: Fair skies will dominate today as high pressure over the eastern Pacific begins pushing inland. Fair skies and temperatures about 10 degrees above normal are expected to continue through the weekend. A couple of systems will pass to the north next week bringing slight variations in temperatures and a few clouds to the northern zones at times. Otherwise warm and dry conditions will continue through the extended period as a strong high pressure ridge remains entrenched over the southwest United States.

Southern California: A cool dry northerly flow is expected to continue over southern California today then a slow warming trend is expected Sunday into Monday as high pressure develops over the plateau. Some morning low clouds are expected this morning with less Sunday morning otherwise mostly clear skies will prevail much of the coming week. Daytime temperatures should be above normal most areas beginning Sunday. Winter officially begins at 0911 hours this morning.
